

Acknowledgments

This review is based on the work and observations of a great many officers of the Department of Agriculture and Rural Affairs over many years. Their contributions to it are acknowledged by the authors.

Much of the research conducted on trace elements in Victoria has been supported directly by individual farmers who provided pastures and animals for field trials. This research has also been funded in part by the Australian Wool Research Trust Fund, the Australian Meat Research Committee, the Australian Dairy Research Committee and some private companies. Many suppliers of trace element preparations have also provided their products for use in experiments.
